Overview of the Course

An individual who creates a new business, bearing most of the risks and enjoying most of the rewards is an entrepreneur and the process by which the business is set up known as entrepreneurship. The main characteristics of an entrepreneur lie in innovation, and bringing in new ideas, goods, services, and business/or procedures. However, there is a difference between Entrepreneurship and small business. Many consider a small business and an entrepreneurial venture as the same, but they are completely different. While a small business means an independent business with a smaller number of employees, with the intention of doing something which carries less innovation and low impact on the business environment, an entrepreneurial venture becomes successful when an organization pursues opportunities and new practices in order to have growth and profitability as its main goals. In Calcutta Business School, there has been a constant effort to create entrepreneurs through regular training and developmental programmes, through workshops. We have created a Centre of Excellence where we always motivate our students to learn, create projects and share their ideas along with the esteemed experts.

Course Description

This course is meant to provide both theoretical as well as maximum practical inputs to students who are interested in either setting up their own enterprises immediately after graduating or set up enterprises after acquiring some experience in an established firm. An attempt has been made to cover, in a comprehensive manner, the most important aspects of the processes that are essential to the creation of enterprises and those that are critical for their sustenance once they have achieved some degree of stability. After attending this Course, the students may go through an advanced course about how to progress in Entrepreneurship, how to start meaningful ventures by customized skilling and learning programs, through a Startup Lab exclusively developed at CBS as CBS Incubation Centre.
